For a robust and effective European public service supporting an ambitious European Union

The European cooperation and the Community model is the only credible way to adequately address the current and future major socio-economic challenges.

This "European way" has to rely on high quality institutions and staff which always keep the citizens and the society needs at the centre. The policy dynamic should be preserved by defending the capacity of the Commission to fully express its right of initiative.

In this context, the unions cannot limit their role to the short term safeguard of salaries and staff categories' expectations. They should always put their action in a clear policy perspective seeking solutions and social progress via the European project.
